The differences between Mr. Brady and the stage hands came up for action yesterday morning at an adjourned meeting of the recently formed United Theatrical Managers Protective Association of the United States and Canada at the Hotel Astor. According to a contract with the International Alliance of Stage Employees of the United States and Canada, embodied in what is known in theatredom as the yellow slip, theatrical companies playing on the road required a separate stage crew from the New York or other extended engagement. The agreement allowed four weeks out of town time, and it was over the interpretation of this clause that trouble arose between the producers and the untweether yesterday and the unexpected announcement of the opening to-night rollowed.
